Could Scarcely Believe It.

When the news first came from Mr. Curtiss I could scarcely believe it, for the three extra man and the 800 pounds fuel represent more than twice the weight of gasolene, oil, water and supplies that we shall carry.
The America's compasses are tied up the American customs authorities. The delay is not material, though somewhat annoying, since it prevented Capt. Creagh Osborne from going with me to Hammondsport to oversee adjusting them in the air liner's cabin. The American customs officials at Quebec were willing to let the instruments go through, but at the border it was insisted that they should be checked through in bond to New York. so they cannot be released until arrangements are made some time today. The visit of the compass expert of the British navy may serve to call attention to the importance of the navigation problem in the overseas flight.

Captain Osborne was exceptical of the possibility of the flight until we showed the possibility of the flight until we showed and a good job which takes every moim what advances had been made in and a good job which takes every mothe last few months. In the course of time the base deciver had landed a nice little string of fish. Smiling happily and guiltly, he made his way snoreward, folded up his telescope rod, presented the morning's catch to a fortunate urchin and returned home.

The vibration, which will be incessant, is taken up by bedding them in horsehair, but still they are delicate instruments, and Captain Osborne was a fearful of damage that he brought them all the way by hand, and has corried ever since the customs officials took them out of his possession. look them out of his possession.

I see no hope now of the America being ready to ship from New York before July 18, but if the work progresses averably at Hammondsport for the next few days I still hope to sail for John's next Saturday.
